Augie Burr

When Agustí Burriel sings, he turns into Augie Burr, an American vocalist from the 1950s. By Ada Castells

Your name is Agustí Burriel and you're from Barcelona, but you perform as an American musician from the 1950s. Why?

It's not nostalgia, because I wasn't around to experience it, but it's an idealised version of an era that I've made my own.

Now that everything vintage is in, do you feel like less of a rarity?

There's a positive side to fashion, which is that the scene has opened up to more people, but the new audience doesn't have the same depth of knowledge as the traditional one.

What attracts you about the era?

The cultural revolution that took place at the time because of rock and roll, that determination to break with attitudes towards race and the family. It was the first great cultural revolution of the 20th century. The hippies were just a confirmation of what had happened.

What's different about you?

With the bands, we want to pay homage to a culture and a sound. We try to be faithful to that. Even in the lyrics to our songs, we use their words. Our original contributions are small changes, with no big leaps. Musicians don't appear out of nowhere: the difference is that I'm up front about my sources of inspiration.

DISCO!

We took the temperature of Barcelona's nightspots to find the city's hottest clubs: the ones that combine top music with the best party atmosphere to send you staggering to bed happy and exhausted.

By Oscar Broc

CLASSICS

A city's nightclubs are part of its unwritten history, the half-hidden world that starts to exercise a magnetic pull on teenagers as soon as they're old enough to put gel in their hair, and whose attraction doesn't fade until they have kids of their own. It's a world with its own laws, and one of them is that while some clubs are here today and gone tomorrow, leaving nothing but headaches and blurred memories, others have a mysterious longevity, and provide formative experiences for generation after generation.

Those born in 1975, like me, experienced the first flickerings of the electronic music scene at Toque BCN, a pioneer; discovered Morrissey at New York; gulped down Katovit energy pills, beer and at Indie music at Mond Bar; managed to get out of Psicodromo alive; were amazed by the lasers in Barçalles; and tried crimped hair and eyeliner at Akelarre. These classic clubs live on in Barcelona's collective memory. I'm talking about Quartier, Apocalypse, Trocadero, Biarritz, Bóveda, Up & Down, Cibeles, Verdi, Ars and Studio 54, all names that will spark stories, nostalgia and vague recollections – and all gone forever.

Meanwhile other classic Barcelona clubs are still going strong. Karma on Plaça Reial is the same teenage meat market as ever. Trauma's dancefloor is full of divorcees. Les Enfants is being refurbished, to re-open in September. Reliable sources inform me that Plataforma never shut! And watch out, because there's a rumour that La Paloma is about to be re-born...

TOP 10 CLUBS

NITSA/LA 2 (SALA APOLO)

Upstairs at Apolo is Barcelona's best electronic music, while downstairs you'll find the city's most intense pop and rock club, with DJs Coco, Graham and Petagas doing what they do best: driving the dancefloor wild with a guitar-driven soundtrack. Nitsa is to the city's clubbing scene what Guardiola was to FC Barcelona: a home for some of the biggest talents in the world. The clubbers who got sweaty there during its '90s heyday remember it fondly – and now their kids are queuing up to get in. Fridays, Saturdays and nights before public holidays, 1am until 6am.

MARULA CAFÉ

Garage, afrobeat, jazz, funk, soul, disco, boogaloo and whatever the gods of the groove dictate. Marula Café is so authentic it hurts. There's no other club in Barcelona with a better vintage playlist than this elegant space near the funkier alleyways of the Barri Gòtic. Its concert programme for connoisseurs of old-school vinyl is simply impeccable. And it pulls no punches with its DJ sessions: every weekend is an explosion of vintage grooves, from Coltrane, Hayes and Puente to Mayfield.

Escudellers, 49
www.marulacafe.com

RAZZCLUB/LOFT (SALA RAZZMATAZZ)

The Loft, alongside Nitsa, offers the most cutting-edge international electronic music in the city. It's seen all the big names and has the most fanatical crowd of all Barcelona's techno temples. Razzmatazz needs no introduction: the kind of mega club where you walk in and crawl out. The danceable pop and rock hits they bombard the crowd with are irresistible. Warning: Razz has a tendency to make revellers over the age of 30 feel like desiccated mummies: it's a young crowd and there's more acne on the dancefloor than in a Clearasil advert.

CABARET BERLÍN

Cabaret Berlín is pretty camp: it's not the best hunting ground for heterosexuals on the prowl. That said, the club that used to be known as Bailèn 22 – a well-known strip joint in its day – is one of the wildest and least inhibited in the city. It boasts a seriously fashionable and up-for-it crowd, wafting aromas of Jean Paul Gaultier perfume, plus a monthly /club night Copacabana which is Barcelona's current place to be.

MÀGIC

Sticky in summer, marinated in sweat and other bodily fluids, Magic is the Keith Richards of Barcelona's rock clubs. Rejecting El Born's hipster tendencies, it brings a dose of attitude to a neighbourhood that's getting fancier by the day. It's been welcoming tattoos and leather jackets since the last Ice Age, and specialises in satisfying the needs of the anti-techno brotherhood. OK, you can hear an Iggy Pop track anywhere, but you won't get the pungent whiff of stale beer, bourbon and raw sex you get in this delectable dive.

BECOOOL

BeCool has had to duke it out with the city's biggest electronic clubs (Nitsa and The Loft) to carve out a share of the techno pie. Its location up at the posh end of town hasn't helped.

Nevertheless, it's made the third step on the podium all its own, with top-notch DJ sessions and live performances. The music policy leans heavily towards the underground, but remains superb. It's an irresistible lure for the most demanding dance music connoisseurs, and the perfect excuse to move to techno in a neighbourhood that's free of beer-sellers and pickpockets.

LA TERRRAZZA

La Terrazza was one of the first clubs in Barcelona to play house music in the open air. Today the city's full of them, but this is still the one to beat. Although it's been around for donkeys' years, Jamboree is still the city's best hip hop and R&B club. ## CDLC

Of all the fishtanks along Passeig Marítim, teeming with exotic creatures and prowling sharks, CDLC is where you'll find the most perfect specimens. This whirlpool of casual hookups, with its beachside terrace, is where summer nights in the city get hottest. Ultra-tanned tourists empty their wallets to the rhythm of house, swarm the terrace for a breath of air, and keep the party going in the sand. Warning: if you're feeling the pinch, this may not be the place for you. Conspicuous consumption is the watchword.

Pg. Marítim de la Barceloneta, 32

NIGHTCARD

Great news for night owls visiting Barcelona who want to live every night as if it were their last. If you're spending a week in BCN and you don't want to miss any of the city's biggest clubs, Barcelona NightCard is your perfect companion, designed with the most determined clubbers in mind, it's also great news for your wallet.

Holders of this personal and non-transferable card, which costs €20, can enter 18 of Barcelona's best-known clubs free, for 7 nights in row, until 2 in the morning.

It's up to you to decide whether you want to cut some rug at Catwalk, or stick around the centre of town and try Boulevard, La Boite, City Hall or Moog.

You also get access to the legendary gay club Arena, with its three separate sites on Balmes, Diputació and Gran Via. Or perhaps you want to dress up to the nines to visit Soho on Carrer Aribau. In a similar vein, heading uptown, there's Sutton and Otto. There's Nick Havanna on Carrer Roselló, Duvet on Corsega, and Sala Bikini and BeCool next to Avinguda Diagonal.

If you head up even further, to Avinguda Tibidabo, you'll find Atlàntic, where it towers high above the city. And on your way back down to sea level, why not try dropping in on the outdoor party apocalypse that is La Carpa Barcelona.

MNAC

As well as their collection of Romanesque art, the MNAC is currently showing two fascinating temporary exhibitions. The first is a selection of works by Antoni Viladomat, the artist who followed on from the generation of painters that was lost in the siege of 1714: his work is a continuation of the artistic traditions that preceded him. The second centres on 19th-century painter Josep Tapiró. We leave Barcelona to land in the heart of the Tangiers medina, where Tapiró set up his studio.

Palau Nacional, Parc de Montjuïc, s/n. Espanya (L1, L3 & FGC).
Sunday 10am-3pm.

Picasso Museum

It was Picasso himself who decided he wanted a museum in Barcelona, and in 1963, it was opened at No. 15, C/Montcada. You'll get a glimpse of the doorway if you can make it through the solid wall of visitors, with queues that start first thing in the morning, and stretch well down the street. But on the other side of the human wall you'll find the permanent collection and the exhibition 'Post-Picasso: Contemporary Reactions', evidence of the impact Picasso's work had on artists all over the world.

The sculptor Frederic Marès was also an important art collector, and donated his entire collection to the city in 1946. Two years later, the Museu Frederic Marès was founded to house a significant collection of sculptures dating from antiquity to the 19th century. While sculpture predominates, some of the most interesting parts of the museum are the galleries that display his other collections: an amazing and wildly diverse selection that documents life in the 19th century through everyday objects. Take a turn round the lovely courtyard on the way out.

Losing yourself on the trails of the botanical gardens is like travelling round the Mediterranean without leaving the city. Especially at this time of year, when they're bursting with colours and scents. As well as its botanical interest, the gardens are a great place to take a book and read in a tranquil patch of shade.

BELLESA TANGERINA, JOSEP TAPIRÓ / DAHESH MUSEUM (NOVA YORK)

Tangier, unfiltered

The Museu Nacional d'Art de Catalunya re-evaluates the work of Orientalist painter Josep Tapiró.

By Eugènia Sendra

In the history of art Josep Tapiró receives at best a passing mention: one more painter to add to the long list of artists and writers that imagined or re-created landscapes and characters of 'the Orient', following in the footsteps of Delacroix and Byron. His name often appears alongside that of the great Catalan Orientalist, Marià Fortuny. But it's hard to walk past his paintings of the Berber bride or the Darcawi holy man without stopping to wonder why you haven't heard of this artist before. To mark the centenary of his death, the MNAC hosts the exhibition 'Josep Tapiró, Painter of Tangier', with 30 little-known works by the painter who arrived in Tangier with Fortuny, and remained there from 1877 until his death.

Ethnographic painting

For Jordi Àngel Carbonell, the exhibition's curator, Tapiró was one of the most important Orientalist painters of the last third of the 19th century, comparable to second-generation painters such as Eugène Fromentin. 'He didn't invent his own version of the Orient, he painted Tangier as he saw it—individuals with their own identities—and closely observed a society that was beginning to disappear.' Tapiró documented the ancient city's Sufi ceremonies, its rites and religious brotherhoods, recording them all meticulously, and excluding any elements that might remind the viewer of European society. 'He was a virtuoso watercolourist, and achieved incredible realism, which is why many have described his works as "ethnographic documents", in both a positive and a negative sense,' says Carbonell.

Tangier was then full of colourful characters – like Walter Harris, a journalist for The Times and a friend of Tapiró's – but became an Islamic and then an international city, and this has contributed to Tapiró's obscurity. So did the dispersal of his works, enthusiastically snapped up in Victorian England, and currently collected by sheiks. According to Carbonell, it's high time he was restored to his rightful place in the history of art.

Electronic homecoming

For the 21st year running, Sónar, the International Festival of Advanced Music and New Media Art, returns to Barcelona. Every year the line-up looks unbeatable, but then along comes the next to outdo the previous. Among this year's highlights, Massive Attack present the world première of their new show; Richie Hawtin, under his alias Plastikman, presents 'Objectt', a new live concept featuring a spectacular obelisk of light; and disco legends Chic, whose hits 'Good Times' and 'Le Freak' have been setting dancefloors on fire for generations, will also be dropping in for a visit. One of the most hotly-anticipated appearances will be James Murphy with 2manydjs, at DESPACIO powered by McIntosh, an exclusive event at Sónar by Day – they will be playing a six-hour vinyl set over the three days of the festival. Not enough for you? The programme also includes some of the biggest names on the electronic music scene, including Four Tet, James Holden, Jon Hopkins, Nils Frahm, Laurel Halo and Ben Frost. The Scandinavian contingent are well-represented, with performances by Lykke Li, Röyksopp and Todd Terje. And that's just for starters.

Single file market

Forget everything you thought you knew about self-service restaurants. Metric Market is something else! By Ricard Martín

Two incontrovertible truths: life is what happens when you're making other plans. And Av. Diagonal, above Plaça Francesc Macià, is a desert. These facts are behind the opening of the Metric Market, a lively food venue that stays open in an area where everything else shuts before nine.

In theory, Metric Market is a self-service restaurant. 'That was the original concept,' says Pipo Torres, one of the four business partners and friends behind the project (he emphasises the friendship). 'Self-service is a business model with a negative image. Why can't we find the positive side?' Not a bad idea, especially given the affection with which most remember the self-service cafeterias of their childhood. Metric Market is 'a market in a straight line. We want to get away from the idea of a conventional restaurant,' adds Silvia Canela. The original idea was to open from 7.30am, with stalls open until 5pm. 'But we started out doing evening meals, and it's going really well. We want to make sure the self-service idea is working before we start it up.'

Within a month, they should have six stalls up and running, all in line, one after the other, including a bakery, with pastries and sandwiches, a stand with the famous Espinaler vermouth and aperitifs, a salad stall, a rotisserie stall with take-away food you can eat in situ, with a set lunch menu – cooked at Metric – and a happy ending with fruit, desserts and ice-cream.

For the time being, the day starts at 5pm at the cocktail bar, and expands into a dinner menu where every dish looks like a hit: stir-fried octopus with potatoes, allioli and honey, and international second courses, such as their Mexican cochinita pibil, or a Mediterranean ceviche. The design is gorgeous: Puig i Cadafalch tiles and exposed brickwork with a well-placed bar. 'Markets are all about the street: we wanted to take the best aspects of street food and bring them inside,' says Torres.

Creative cuisine

Coure

Creative, generous and nicely executed dishes at reasonable prices, from experienced chef Albert Ventura. Ptge. Marimon, 20. 93 200 75 32. Gràcia (FGC). Expensive.

D.O. Vins i platillos

One of the first bars in Barcelona to offer a wine list and raise their tapas and tasting dishes to delicatessen level. It's next to the Verdi cinema, so you'll need a miracle to find a spot just before or after a film. They serve wines by the glass and elaborate tapas, such as their courgette flower tempura with cheese, or cod loins with tomato confit. It might not be the cheapest eatery in Barcelona, but the delicacies on offer will take your mind off your wallet. Verdi, 36. 93 218 96 73. Fontana (L3). Mid-range.

Dos Palillos

Albert Raurich, formerly of El Bulli, proves that Asian and Spanish tapas have a lot of common ground. His creativity and the quality of his output have won him his first Michelin star. Dos Palillos is the perfect fusion between a Spanish tapas bar and a Tokyo sushi house. Elisabets, 9. 93 304 05 13. Catalunya (L1, L3). Expensive.

Enoteca

Chef Paco Pérez, from the seaside town of Llançà, won his first Michelin star in Barcelona, but he did it by staying true to his roots, the traditions of the fishing villages of Cap de Creus, where cooks pride themselves on getting the very best from the finest seafood. His sea cucumbers with wild mushrooms are unmissable.

Marina, 19-21 (Hotel Arts). 93 483 81 08. Ciutadella/Vila Olímpica (L4). Deluxe.

Basque restaurants

Euskal Etxea

One of the first bars in the city to offer San Sebastián-style pintxos (tapas on bread) and they've managed to stay ahead of the pack with those little elements of added value. For starters, if you find the forest of elbows at the bar intimidating, there's table service. And they have vegetarian pintxos, as well as gluten-free ones.

Gorria

One of Barcelona's essential Basque restaurants. Chef Javier Gorria serves up genuine delicacies like his mango salad with lobster, his Basque-style perretxikos (wild mushrooms), and Araitz pigeon.

Diputació, 42. 93 245 11 64. Rocafort (L1). Expensive.

Igueldo

A great Basque restaurant in an area that was crying out for one. Quality ingredients and impeccable cooking. Grilled meat and fish. Great atmosphere, especially in the evening. Rosselló, 186. 93 452 25 55. Provença (FGC). Expensive.

Irati

When talking about the best pintxos, the expression 'haute cuisine in miniature' seems to sum it all up. At Irati you'll find inspired combinations like piquillo peppers with tuna, anchovy paste, and sautéed leeks. And for dessert, what could be better than what they've christened the 'Spicy Orgasm': goat's cheese with walnuts, jam, and crunchy peppers.

Cardenal Casañas, 17. 93 302 30 84. Liceu (L3). Mid-range.

Stepping out

New Catalan footwear brand Mus&Roew is conquering feet all over the world, starting with Japan.
By Laia Beltran

Today's a day for sandals. It's June and I could head out for the day to Cadaques or Sau. But I wouldn't turn my nose up at Olost, Bruc or Sils. Those familiar with Catalan place names will appreciate how local geography has been turned into a campaign map for a young label with global ambitions. I love the idea of a Natsumi, a Magali or an Evelyn wearing designer sandals that bear the names of tiny Catalan villages that, in some cases, even the locals couldn't pinpoint on a map.

The idea of matching shoes to places comes from Mus&Roew, the footwear label created by Andorran Lambert Perrera and Catalan Jordi Aznar. It's only been a year since they set out on their own, but they've already got a foothold in Japan, and in the capitals that matter most on the fashion circuit: in Paris (at the Printemps department store), London (at none other than the revered Anthropologie) and New York (at Rita Brookoff's legendary Legacy store). Their products are also on sale in countries as far apart as Italy and Australia. But what about Barcelona? You'll find the biggest range at Ivori, a treasure trove in the Born, and selected styles at RooM (Sant Gervasi) and Colmillo de Morsa (Gràcia).

What's the secret of their success? There's no magic formula, they tell us, just putting in a lot of hours of hard work, having many years of experience in the business behind them, working for the huge corporations, and lots of faith in their own product. The fact is that Mus&Roew shoes – made with craft techniques in Almansa, on the eastern edge of Spain's central plateau – have got something special, that X factor of footwear. The designs are timeless, deliberately restrained, modern classics built to last longer than the six months of a given season. They know how to combine raw materials, forcing the interplay of textures, especially with various metallic leathers.

Perhaps there's also a Gallic influence, which would make sense: Lambert works with Sibylle, a fashion designer based in Paris. But you won't find a big selection of high heels. Mus&Roew believe in flats, which may account for the genuinely masculine air of their shoes. If Woody Allen's Annie Hall really existed, she'd walk through Manhattan in a pair of these shoes, which have already become an object of desire, not just here but all over the world as well.
